

Recovery Efforts

When public health emergencies appear to be coming to a close, many public health officials are continuing to assist the community by:

- distributing preventative medicines or vaccines
- providing education and communication to the public and the news media
- monitoring environmental conditions in the community
- conducting inspections of damaged facilities
- communicating with partners in the community and surrounding jurisdictions
- investigating the cause of the emergency

The Norwood City Health Department evaluates all responses to public health emergencies to determine the need for additional training, resources, or changes to existing plans and policies.
